What is verification information? How do I use it?

Verification information (such as MD5, SHA256) is a string of numbers used to verify whether the downloaded file is correct and complete. When verification information is marked next to a file download, you can write it down. After downloading the file, use the file verification tool to calculate the verification information of the file you downloaded. Compare it with the verification information you wrote down before, and you will know whether the file you downloaded is complete. If the two are the same, then the file you downloaded is complete and correct. If the calculated result does not match the one marked online, then the file you downloaded is incomplete or an error occurred during the download.

The correct way to share the installation package

1. Right-click the "*" symbol next to the version number (as shown in the picture, you can see this symbol by moving the mouse here)

2. Click the "Copy Link" option (as shown in the picture, this option may be different for each browser, just click the one that matches your meaning)

3. Send the link you just copied to your friends.
